Up to noon to-day, the Customs' courier with the French mail had not arrived, so we have no letters to reply to. The non-arrival of thecourier is something unusual, as the mails bitherto have been extraordinarily regular in their appearance during the winter seasons. On the 7th, the heavy mail with our newspapers, &c., by the Chinese post-office, reached here. It is the second mail by this channel we have received this winter. 11th January, 1875.

Shukers, whose expulsion from their home has: been reported this week :--At no great distance in Hampshire from the experiment in Socialism and failed, the latest attempt of the kind in English seems in a fair way towards collapse. In January of 1873 less than twenty persons, coming from Londonwhere they bud been known as Girlingites, by reason of their baying adopted as their "mother" a Suffolk servant girl, " who had received no learning save what she was taught by the Spirit of God "-purchased an estate of thirtyone acres on the borders of the New Forest This was mainly accomplished by the means of a Miss Wood, a lady of wealth and position among them, who gave up everything-ne al! of them had done and continue to do-for the common good. Their object was to settle down bere, and, separating themselves from the world, to accept a life of sacrifice, and live inprayer and in good works, buying whatever they might find necessary for their daily wants. but selling nothing of the produce of their estate, their intention being to raise only such as they might themselves consume. Among the number of believers soon attracted together at the new place were found various bandicrafts. men, who turned their knowledge to account for the good of the community-everything required, whether as food or clothing, being as Beans, 50 lbs. each; 251 bags Sugar, 100 lbs. fur as possible raised and made on the premises. | each : 147 jars Sugar, 80 boxes Sugar : 1,520 The "brothers" appeared in the ordinary boxes Oil; 200 boxes Wine; 100 boxes Sago; dress of men, but the "slaters" adopted a 100 bags Pepper; 80 pkgs. THE OLD WIFE. An old wife sat by the fireside, Swaying thoughtfully to and fro. In an ancient chair whose creaky joints Told a tale of long ago; While down by her side, on the kitchen floor, Stood a basket of worsted balls-a score. 'Her good man dosed o'er the intest news.' "Till the fire of his pipe went out; Unheeded, the kitten with ounning paws Rolled and tangled the balls about. Still sat the wife in her ancient chair. Swaying to and fro in the fire-light glare. But anon a rusty tear-drop came In her eye of faded blue. And down her check in a furrow cropt, Like a single drop of dew. And often coursed this silent stroam.

Till her good man noticed the dimined eye beam. And he marvelled that the cheerful light Of her eye had weary grown. But he marvelled more at the tangled balls; So he said in his gentle tone: I have slared thy joys since our marriage you Conceal not from me thy sorrow now." Then she spoke of the time when the basket there

Was filled to its vary brim. And now there remained of that goodly pile But a single pair for him. So wonder not at the dimmed eyellight-"There's but one pair of stocking a to mend to-night I cannot but think of the busy feet; Whose stockings were wont to lay In the basket, each awaiting its turn,

Now wandered so far away; How their sprightly steps to a mother dear From morning till night would gladden her ear "b'or each empty nock in the basket old By the hearth there's an empty sent; And I miss the shadows upon the wall, And the patter of many feet. "I'is for this that a tear guthered over my sight, At the one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

"Twas said that far through the forest wild, And over the mountains bold. Was a land whose rivers and darkening caves Were filled with shining gold, Then our first-born turned from our cottage door, And I saw that the shadows were only four. " Another went forth on the founding ways, And diminished the basket store: But his feet graw cold on the ocean drear-They'll never be warm any more. And this nook in its emptiness seemeth to me

To give back no voice but the moan of the sea "Two others went forth toward the setting sun, To build them a home in its light; And fairy fingers have taken their share To mend by the fire-side bright. Other baskets their stockings fill, But wine, O mine, is emptier still!

"Another-the dearest, the fairest, the best-By the angels was taken away. And clothed in garments that grow not old, In the land of continual day So wonder no more at the dimmed eye-sight, While I mend this one pair of stockings to-night."

A large party was assembled to meet him. I must own to feeling great astonishment at his appearance as, if his sister was small, he was smaller stil -that is, for a man. He was what Charles | the STRAITS. Dickens would have called a "mite." came into the room on tip-toe, at a sort of run, with his head thrown back; and first he kissed his sister Ellen most affectionately then he kissed nearly every other protty gi he could get at. He was soon surrounded, and he sat there chirping and chatting, and turning his head about like a pet bird. His manner was delightfully frank, genial, and winning. He was full of the gossip of the day, and looked like a well-to-do little gentleman who had no other occupation except amusing himself. His head was nearly bald, and there was just a fringe of slightly-grizzled hair round the back and the temples. His nose was retrousse (cocked). His complexion resembled the colour of certain apple, with which as a schoolboy I was over-familiar, called a russet brown, with a good tinge of healthy red in it. A soupcon current local rate of premia will be allowed of the same colour was visible on the end of upon insurances effected with this Company. the little man's nose; but his head, which be carried in a slanting direction, was vory good, and his eye was large, liquid, lustrous and full of intelligence. He had a large double gold eye-glass, which he carried suspended round his neck by a black ribbon, and made frequent use of. I cannot remember how he was dressed; but when I met him, as I did, of many subsequent occasions, his attire was peculiar. He wore a long olive-green, surtout coat, a blue neckcloth and a white hat set very much back upon his head. In society it was almost impossible to get at him; for he was generally the centre of a perfect galaxy of petticoats. All the prettiest women seemed to fondle and caress him, and treat him much as they would a large wax doll; but when he sang, as he did on that particular evening; two of his famous melodies, the "Last Rose of Summer " and "Oft in the stilly night." there was a vibration, a flutter, and a tendency to hysterical emotion instantly perceptible, such as I have never observed in any other audience except that of Mr. Robertson in his chapel at Brighton. I cannot attempt to describe either the singing or its electrical effect; but I could perfectly well understand the meaning of a story which I remember reading in the "Memoirs of Sir Jonah Barrington," of how a certain lady of quality, hearing the little man warbling one of his love ditties, laid her hand upon his arm and said: "For Heaven's sake, Moore, stop, stop! this is not for the good of my! soul!" Earl Russell, in his "Memoirs," Little Orphan says Moore was the most brilliant man he Massilia ever met. I suppose he was right; and this brilliancy was concealed by a manner which, if you did not know who he was, would have led to an entirely different conclusion. The Swinger world has all its wants, she used to say; and Thalia modern English society is the final outcome

"We pledge ourselves to drink whiskey motemperance society. Victor Hugo didn't begin "Notre Dame until m re than a year fiter he had made a contract for it with the publisher, M. Gosselin. The title had been announced in a very promissing way, but in July, 1830, not a line had been written, and it seemed as if the work would Dung-wee only be worth just its name-that is, worth Notre Dame." Gosselin began to think be was a goslin' indeed for making such a contract; but in January, 1831, the novel was finished, and proved a great success: Bleepless persons should court the sun The very worst coporific is laudaumm, and the very best sunshine. Therefore, it is sir," I said, dressing rapidly. "I thought and the "mad" Lord Ferrers condemned to very plain that poor eleepers should pass as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs and yet they do not know it. They slut the soushine out of their houses and hearts; they wear veils, they carry parasols,

they do all to keep off the most potent influence
